

Convenient Optical Cable Laying Reel

AI Overview

A simple optical cable laying reel is a portable, lightweight device designed to efficiently wind, transport, and deploy fiber optic cables while protecting them from damage.

Key Features

Material and Construction: Most simple optical cable reels are made from steel pipe frames with engineering plastic components or lightweight polymers, ensuring durability while remaining portable. Some advanced models use impact-modified polymer for easier handling in harsh environments (UnitekFiber, OCC) or laminated corrugated cardboard for eco-friendly, compact solutions (Optomer) .

Portability: Reels are designed with easy-grip handles, wheels, and lightweight frames, allowing operators to carry and maneuver them effortlessly. Some reels, like the MARS system, offer modular options including backpacks and tripods for field deployment .

Capacity: Depending on cable thickness, reels can store up to 600 meters for 3.0 mm cables or 230 meters for 5.0 mm cables. Larger industrial reels can accommodate up to 1200 meters, suitable for long-distance outdoor installations .

Operation: Simple reels feature manual winding cranks that rotate clockwise or counterclockwise, with fixed wire grooves to secure cable ends. Some systems include bolt-type fixing devices to stabilize the reel during use .

InstaReel systems provide preconnectorized cables for quick deployment without fusion splicing, ideal for FTTx installations .

Protection and Stability: Reels are designed to prevent cable damage during transport and deployment. Cardboard reels distribute cables evenly to reduce bending, while metal or polymer reels offer sturdy bases and secure locking mechanisms for stability in harsh conditions .

Applications

- Outdoor fiber optic cable laying for long-distance projects
- Indoor cabling in data centers or telecom facilities
- Temporary setups for events, live broadcasts, or excavation projects
- FTTx installations with preconnectorized cables for rapid deployment
