

Ghana s strength

AI Overview

Ghana's current strength spans both its military capabilities and its national football team's competitive performance.

Military Strength (2026) Ghana is ranked 112th out of 145 countries in the 2026 Global Firepower (GFP) assessment, with a Power Index score of 2.4566, where 0.0000 represents the highest possible strength. The nation's military strength is evaluated across several categories:

- Manpower: Includes active, reserve, and paramilitary personnel, reflecting the maximum theoretical personnel Ghana can mobilize.
- Land Power: Comprises motorized and mechanized vehicles, towed artillery, and multiple launch rocket systems.
- Air Power: Covers war-making aerial systems, excluding trainers and drones.
- Naval Power: Includes commissioned hulls and patrol assets, though Ghana's naval capabilities are limited compared to larger powers.
- Financials: Reflects the nation's ability to sustain prolonged military operations.

Ghana is an active member of the African Union, and its geographic positioning provides inherent defensive advantages. Overall, while Ghana's military is modest on a global scale, it maintains a balanced structure suitable for regional defense and peacekeeping operations.

Football Team Strength (2026 FIFA World Cup) Ghana's national football team is preparing for the 2026 FIFA World Cup, competing in Group L. The squad has demonstrated resilience and tactical discipline, recently achieving a 1-0 victory over Panama, despite the absence of key midfielder Thomas Partey. Key contributors include Caleb Yirenkyi, who scored the decisive goal, and Brandon Thomas-Asante, who played a pivotal role in the match. The team is now focused on upcoming fixtures, including a challenging match against England, with players like Antoine Semenyo expressing determination to perform strongly. The Ghana squad is characterized by:

- Tactical versatility: Able to adapt to different match situations and opponents.
- Experienced core: Players with international exposure and strong club-level performance.
- Youthful energy: Integration of younger talents to m...
